It was a pleasure to judge at this well run show a breed that was my first love and is still very dear to me. On a general note I was disappointed to find some round eye apertures which detracts from that super Springer expression, also some exhibits had round heavy bone which ended in large feet. While I am aware that the Standard calls for 'well boned' I was always taught that bone should be oval not round as this helps with the impression of the 'raciest in build of all land Spaniels'. Some exhibits lacked muscle tone and second thigh which often combined with not having that special Springer gait. I would never penalise a Springer for being a little exuberant but I do think that some exhibits would benefit from ringcraft classes; it's both difficult and time consuming trying to assess a dog that's not trained for the ring
